Course Description

This course is designed to introduce students to new and inter-disciplinary digital humanities approaches, methodologies, and tools, and to explore applications to text, image, map, and other media sources. It will appeal to students in history, literature, fine arts, and music who want an introduction to state-of-the-art digital humanities research. There will be flexibility to accommodate the specific disciplines and interests of the students.

The class will be held twice a week and will feature instructor and expert presentations, demonstrations, and discussion. Students will complete weekly readings and assignments, and a major project that applies digital humanities tools. Participation will be evaluated through reflective blog posting, in-class discussion, and peer review.

Learning outcomes

- Increase digital literacy skills, and be able to comprehend and use appropriate language of digital humanities research in their own and related humanities disciplines
- Understand and be able to analyze the advantages of different methodologies of digital humanities inquiry
- Learn to collect, manage, and manipulate digital data from various sources
- Be able to formulate, direct, and complete a digital humanities project, and explain its significance to academic and lay audiences

Evaluation

Participation, Blog and Assignments (60%)

- In-class and outside class (blog) preparation and participation
  - Research, reading
  - Questions, contributions
  - Reflection, commentary
  - Peer helping/collaboration
- Assignments are usually due before class

Digital Humanities Project (40%)

The project is the main focus on the course and aim to have students apply the tools and techniques of Digital Humanities to any humanities subject. It is to be considered as a quasi-capstone project, that is: an “intensive, active learning project, requiring significant effort in the planning and implementation, as well as preparation of a substantial final work product.” Students are encouraged to start developing topics right away. A Project Plan (1500 words) describing the academic rationale for the project (including literature review) and the plan for execution is due February 26th and will form the basis for the Preliminary Project Presentation that introduces the project to the class and takes guidance and feedback. Final projects and reports are due mid-April.

Course Resources

Course information, including class schedule and assignment details, is on the class website:

<http://jandrewross.ca/hist4170.php>

Students will set up and maintain personal blogs that will serve to communications and project updates. Please note that these will be publically accessible (now and for the foreseeable future) so proper standards of decorum are expected.

D2L CourseLink will only be used for grades and other items for which we want to restrict access.
